Review

Broadcom and IBM were the top performers during the year, boosted by consecutive better-than-expected earnings results. Demand for AI-related products was a key driver of the strong performance. Emerson Electric ended the year strongly, posting solid fourth-quarter results driven by improvements in test and measurement. Microchip was weak in 2024 during a tumultuous year in which order recovery was delayed and inventories increased significantly, putting pressure on net working capital and free cash flow. The position was halved in early December. Logistics companies such as UPS, Kuehne & Nagel and DHL Group had a difficult year due to the delay in the previously announced recovery in volumes. UPS was also pressured by lost volume due to labor negotiations and higher labor costs. At year-end, we reduced Broadcom as we took some profits and invested in Baker Hughes. The company is a major oilfield services company that provides equipment and technology to the oil and gas industry worldwide. It should benefit from continued growth in demand for energy infrastructure.

Outlook

In the US, economic activity held up remarkably well throughout 2024. While momentum slowed somewhat early in the second half of the year, it picked up as markets began to price in Donald Trump's victory in the US election. While economic activity is likely to remain strong in the coming months, we see a risk that sentiment could deteriorate once the market shifts its focus to tariffs and the prospect of stricter US immigration policy. Growth in the euro area disappointed in 2024 and remains on a weak footing. Manufacturing activity remains weak, which is likely to lead to a rise in unemployment in 2025. Political risks in France and Germany have increased in 2024. On the positive side, inflation has fallen close to the ECB's 2% target, which should allow the ECB to continue cutting its key interest rate throughout 2025 and allow some recovery in eurozone economic activity. The JSS Global Dividend Fund remains well positioned in this uncertain environment by focusing on quality companies with strong balance sheets, good operating cash flows and dividend visibility.
