Review

Equities were down in the most of October, as the MSCI World was down 2% in US dollar terms. The market was mostly driven by strong US macro data and greater odds of Trump winning the US elections on November 5. The first wave of third quarter company publications has confirmed weak trends in cyclical sectors, in line numbers for large US technology companies driving profit taking. That was only partly compensated by strong results from banks. The Next-Gen Consumer fund was down in the month of October, however outperforming the Morningstar category during the period. The fund is still up year to date and continues to strongly outperform the Morningstar category. The month was dominated by a very strong performance of consumer-related semiconductors names such as Nvidia and TSMC, the strong performance of the travel space benefiting portfolio holdings such as Booking and IHG. Staples and luxury names have been notable detractors during the month.

Outlook

The consumer environment is solid, as US consumers enjoy lower inflation with a relatively robust labor market while European consumers' real wage prospects are improving. While we identify some pockets of weakness (Chinese consumers, lower income households), we believe this remains a favorable environment for discretionary consumption, especially companies able to capitalize on new consumer trends. The portfolio strategy is unchanged. Consumer priorities are changing at a fast pace - a transformation driven by the specific consumption choices of next-gen consumers. We position the portfolio to benefit from this transformation with a concentrated selection of quality companies well exposed to next-gen consumer preferences across 12 subthemes. The quality bias is clear: the average ROE of companies in the portfolio currently sits above 20%, with modest leverage. The PE premium we pay for names in the portfolio seems to be justified when discounting superior quality and growth.
