Review

January was a stellar month in global equities, with European equities outperforming their US counterparts given their more attractive valuations and some market rotation into cyclicals and value stocks. Change in the AI narrative due to a new DeepSeek AI model was also causing market volatility. The Next-Gen Consumer fund continued to outperform its Morningstar peer group. The fund's holdings in luxury and sports apparel were strong during the month as several names in both categories rebounded on stronger than expected results. Especially the US consumer proved to be more resilient than expected during the holiday season. Furthermore, after the DeepSeek release the fund benefited from exposure to AI beneficiaries (Meta, Amazon). The best contributors were Meta, Hermes and Richemont. The detractors were Electronic Arts on disappointing results and Nvidia, as the DeepSeek release caused investors to question the need for Nvidia's superior chips. Decker Outdoor, whose fourth-quarter guidance was lower than consensus, was also a detractor.

Outlook

The consumer environment is solid, driven by US consumers that enjoy a relatively robust labor market, while European consumers' real wage prospects are improving. While we identify some pockets of weakness - Chinese consumers, lower income households and potentially higher inflation due to trade tariffs - we believe this continues to be a favorable environment for discretionary consumption, especially companies able to capitalise on new consumer trends. The portfolio strategy is unchanged. Consumer priorities are changing at a fast pace - a transformation driven by the specific consumption choices of next-gen consumers. We position the portfolio to benefit from this transformation with a concentrated selection of quality companies well exposed to next-gen consumer preferences across 12 subthemes. The quality bias is clear: the average ROE of companies in the portfolio currently sits above 20%, with modest leverage. The PE premium we pay for names in the portfolio seems to be justified when discounting superior quality and growth.
