Review

August began with a continuation of the equity market sell-off seen in July. Technology stocks in particular were negatively impacted before rallying strongly as more favourable macroeconomic data in the US eased hard landing fears. Against this backdrop, August saw significant volatility and rotation in the technology sector. Semi and semi-cap companies suffered significant sell-offs, while software held up better. In this context, the fund underperformed its Morningstar peer group in August. We took advantage of the sell-off to increase our exposure to some high conviction names and we diversified the portfolio by reducing exposure to AI, while increasing exposure to cybersecurity, health tech and water tech.

Outlook

The Covid-19 pandemic will have long lasting implications and will change the future behaviours of corporates and consumers. The rising need for faster internet bandwidth, innovative cybersecurity solutions and decentralized computing is set to rapidly increase in the coming years. Therefore, our portfolio is tilted towards these long-term winners. Going forward we are confident that our differentiated investment approach will help us to navigate through this environment. Although we continue to build the core of the portfolio around the secular growers, we still “embrace cyclical” by investing in industries whose multiples are lower and whose end markets have contracted for a very long time (i.e. memory, logistics automation, analog semiconductors).
