Review

The Chinese equity market extended losses at the beginning of September. On 24 September, the Chinese regulators announced a package of policy stimuli. Then, on 26 September, the Politburo meeting sent clearer signals of easing measures. The market reacted immediately to the forceful and unprecedented moves from the regulators, with the CSI300 recording a five-day gain of 25%, the strongest on record. Trading activities were also boosted. The long-anticipated stimulus by the People's Bank of China exceeded expectations both in scope and magnitude. It included monetary easing (a 50 bps RRR cut and a 20 bps policy rate cut), property market easing (reduced minimum downpayment ratio for second-home buyers from 25% to 15% nationwide, and a 50 bps rate cut on existing mortgages), and stock market boost (the new tools of RMB 500 billion swap programme for equity purchases and the RMB 300 billion re-lending program for share buybacks). Immediately after the PBoC's move, top-tier cities relaxed property purchase restrictions. More detailed policies will be rolled out soon on the fiscal front.

Outlook

We believe the stimulus package forebodes a reversal of the trend for China's economy and the capital market. We think the policy-induced stock market momentum will not wane in the short run, although two-way volatility may be lifted until investors observe convincing improvement of economic figures (such as inflation, consumption, and property sales). How far the upside could extend will also hinge on the execution of policy supports and upcoming economic data. Nevertheless, the increase in confidence levels ignited by decisive policy support is usually a prelude to more active economic behaviour. That said, we do expect that policy-induced optimism will translate into increased consumption and investments in the economy. In terms of growth, we maintain our 2024 GDP forecast at 4.8% as our forecast has already factored in the acceleration of policy support in the second half along with consumption, real estate and the equity market. Recent measures add more conviction to sequential improvement in the fourth quarter compared to the third.
