Review

After the February-April rally (CSI300 TR returned 12.10%), China's equity market experienced a correction in May (-0.68%) and June (-3.30%), erasing some of the previous gains. However, the year-to-date performance remained positive at 2.06% (measured by CSI300 TR). Investors' confidence was hit by multiple factors, such as lackluster economic recovery, lingering risks from the hawkish US Federal Reserve, and the EU's anti-subsidy probe into Chinese electric vehicles. The average daily trading volume decreased. China's Manufacturing PMI stayed at 49.5% in June. China's non-manufacturing sector expanded albeit at a slower pace. The consumer demand was relatively resilient. Chinese tourism surged during the Dragon Boat holiday, with domestic tourist trips growing by 6.3% year on year. The property market laid out more details for implementing the "historic" housing market rescue plan announced in May. Continued efforts were also seen in the capital market. China vowed for a high-standard financial opening-up and unveiled eight measures for the STAR board to promote high-quality development.

Outlook

Looking into the second half of 2024, macro activities would remain steady and resilient. Consumer confidence and income expectation may need more time to come back, although service consumption and outbound travel are quite robust. Deflation concerns are abating while property market drag is expected to alleviate given increased policy support to address inventory issues and stimulate new sales. Meanwhile, capital market reform has opened up a new era where listed companies adopt better practice in corporate governance and rewarding shareholders. Major downside risks include geopolitical tensions surrounding the US election, and slower-than-expected economic recovery. We remain constructive on the A share market in the second half of 2024. In the base case, we forecast CSI 300 to climb 10.9% to 3850 towards the end of the year. The increase would attribute almost evenly to multiple expansion (toward five-year average) and earnings growth.
