

Arfina Selection Swiss Small & Mid Cap ESG Fund - C

ISIN: CH1113759190

Investment objective

The Fund seeks to achieve long-term capital appreciation by investing in a diversified portfolio of equities of small and mid-cap companies domiciled in Switzerland or exercising the predominant part of their economic activity in Switzerland.

Investment policy

Arfina is committed to an active investment approach with a focus on bottom-up stock selection. Investment decisions are based on fundamental company analysis. Our investment philosophy is to identify undervalued, high-quality companies with sustainable development properties. We invest in companies taking into account the economic cycle and industry-specific factors, with a long-term time horizon. Due to our investment philosophy, we are flexible with regard to "style investing".

Market comment

The month in brief

At the beginning of the month, fears of a recession arose when stock markets around the world suffered three days of significant declines - however, the cart was put before the horse and the recession was interpreted as the result rather than the cause of the weakness. History teaches us that a healthy market needs its breather. No emergency interest rate cuts were required, which were called for by various market participants. A little later, however, Fed Chairman Powell was quoted very explicitly as saying that in September we would actually see the interest rate cut that consensus had been expecting for some time. Ultimately, this also supported the Swiss equity market over the month of August. The bumpy start to the month was ironed out to end the month just over half a percent in positive territory. Our Arfina Selection Swiss Small & Mid Cap ESG Fund also managed a slight gain.

Ain'tno sunshine

Although the fund has never invested in Meyer Burger, this case is so spectacular that it is worth a few thoughts. The whole world is calling for more photovoltaic installations and Meyer Burger, which considers itself a technology leader, is showing a share price chart which is approaching the zero line like a hypotenuse. In 5 out of 8 months this year, the share price has fallen by more than a third - most recently in August by more than 60% alone. Year-to-date it has fallen by more than 96%. What is going on? Well, in a brief analysis of the history, you can see that the company was last in the black in 2011, and the only figure rising is the number of shares, due to the regular necessary capital increases. While that should provide enough warning lights to stay away from the stock, there are also strategic concerns. Caution is generally called for in business models relying on subsidies, and the additional competitive pressure from Chinese rivals several times its size exposes a small European company to a price war it cannot possibly win. Maybe the traditional business of solar cell production machinery might still have held out some hope of success had it been better managed. For four years now, the company's current management has been trying to square the circle by completely changing its business model, transforming itself from a mechanical engineering company into a solar panel manufacturer and thus entering this shark tank. The hoped-for funding measures in Germany came neither to the extent nor at the speed desired. One may wonder whether there is any hope at all for establishing a good basis for production given the current government chaos affecting our northern neighbors. With its move to the USA, Meyer Burger is now experiencing the same struggles all over again. The Herculean task of converting the business model, relocating production to another continent, lobbying politicians and achieving the necessary technological progress simply leaves too many balls to juggle.
