Review

Throughout the 4th quarter global interest rates sharply increased on the back of a resilient economy and uncertainty about the incoming US president's stance regarding tariffs, fiscal policy, etc.. The fund outperformed due to its lower duration vs. the BM with a steepener in the long end, as well as due to its FX positions, with a strong underweight in JPY. The OW in SSAs and Corps vs. Sovereign bonds also helped due to higher carry and spreads tightening throughout the quarter.

Outlook

While fundamentals and central bank communication suggest that global interest rates are not very far away from where they should be, the key to reconsider the duration and FX positioning will be how the incoming US President's administration will shape fiscal policy and geopolitics. For now we are keeping our lower duration position and continue to expect further gradual normalization of curves.
