Review

In 2024, the Swiss economy performed slightly better than its counterpart in the euro area, where economic growth remains fragile. Amid a rapid decline in inflation, the SNB was one of the first central banks to lower its key rate in 2024. The SNB is approaching the end of its rate cut cycle following the most recent reduction by 50 basis points. This should heighten upward pressure on the Swiss franc in the coming year and could prompt the SNB to step up its interventions on the forex market. Yields on 10-year Swiss Confederation bonds stood at 0.33% by the end of the reporting period, which was eight basis points lower than at the end of the previous quarter. We kept the duration slightly underweight, which had no material influence on the relative performance. Meanwhile, the sector allocation and selection of securities had a positive impact. The portfolio generated a total return of +1.37%, which was seven basis points more than the benchmark (+1.30%).

Outlook

Key rate expectations have generally moved sideways within a broad range in the last twelve months. In our view, long-term yields are fairly valued and should remain at high levels in the coming year. However, we see potential for a significant downtrend in UK yields. Valuations seem expensive given that risk premiums in all fixed-income sub-asset classes are close to their historical lows. Yet in the absence of a pronounced economic downturn, there is currently no reason for a structural underweight in corporate credit. We are maintaining a neutral to slightly shorter weighting for the duration. We are continuing to overweight corporate bonds, but are only making new investments on a very selective basis. Accordingly, government bonds remain underweight.
