JSS Sust. Bond - Global High Yield I EUR dist hedged

Review

Against a backdrop of a resilient economy and rising rates, global HY spreads hit 10-year lows at the end of October. Strong technicals with limited supply and robust inflows continued to be key drivers, while the fault environment remained benign. The index delivered -0.23% in October, and the fund slightly underperformed. Drivers for the underperformance were underperformance in some higher beta EUR HY names such as Kier and Eramet, plus our underweights in the lowest credit qualities.

Outlook

All-in yields are still above their 10Y average, which is attractive given that most of the maturity walls have been addressed and inflows into the asset class keep spreads in check, while credit metrics look sound for most issuers, softening moderately from very strong levels. The election of Trump as US president has unleashed some animal spirits and is so far taken as a positive by the market. While the actual effect of the economy will depend on policy priorities (de-regulation/growth vs. tax cuts/immigration), spreads are expected to remain range-bound until year-end/inauguration. We remain, however, cautious as regards the weakest capital structures, as they would need a much stronger economy, in addition to deep cuts. We have a preference for issuers with healthy balance sheets, a decent liquidity runway, and/or good capital market access.
