Review

Despite an initial pullback, equity markets posted a solid performance in September. This reflected a 50 bps rate cut by the US Federal Reserve, which was welcomed by investors as reinforcing the "soft landing" narrative, and a surprising economic stimulus initiative by the Chinese government, which supported a rally in more cyclical sectors. In this context, healthcare underperformed the broader market due to pharmaceuticals, and was further dragged by disappointing clinical data presentations from Roche in obesity and AstraZeneca in oncology. On the flip side, medtech and life science outperformed on hopes for a faster rebound in demand from the Chinese market following the economic stimulus. The fund underperformed the Morningstar category in September, mainly due to the underweight in China. The industry allocation also contributed negatively (overweight in pharmaceuticals), partly offset by positive stock selection in pharmaceuticals as well as healthcare providers and services. From a style perspective, quality and size had a negative contribution.

Outlook

Despite more benign recent macro data, there are plenty of signs pointing to an economic slowdown, which will likely drive flows into defensive sectors, benefiting healthcare, especially pharmaceuticals. Pharmaceuticals offer strong fundamentals and can benefit from the removal of the long-dated overhang of drug pricing risk. Despite a lack of relevant clinical catalysts in the second half of the year, biotech might benefit from a rotation into small caps driven by the drop in bond yields, while M&A deals could pick up steam. The underweight will be gradually reduced, with the current allocation anchoring on key single strong convictions with de-risked pipelines and strong commercial outlooks. Medtech remains fundamentally sound, helped by a healthy utilisation environment, but the short-term prospects are less clear with investors positioning and decelerating growth, hence the neutral position with a focus on the strongest product cycles. Still, the outlook for life sciences is improving with a recovery in sight, hence the overweight position, while healthcare providers and services remain underweight.
