Monthly Comment

In August, gold closed at $2,044 per ounce, a slight increase of 0.23%. Demand from the Eastern market and central bank purchases offset sales of retail gold ETFs, which have returned to pre-pandemic levels. Despite attractive valuations, gold stocks are affected by broad market competition. Mining operators have improved their operations but face geopolitical scrutiny and capital cost issues, leading to market undervaluation. Some companies are seizing opportunities, but the sector appears significantly undervalued. This suggests a good investment opportunity, comparable to times when production costs exceeded market prices. We recommend continuing to invest in the sector to achieve a value adjustment.
