The value of an investment and the income from it can fall as well as rise as a result of market and currency fluctuations and you may not get back the amount originally invested. Investing in companies in emerging markets involves higher risk than investing in established economies or securities markets. Emerging Markets may have less stable legal and political systems, which could affect the safe-keeping or value of assets. The Fund's investment include shares in small-cap companies and these tend to be traded less frequently and in lower volumes than larger companies making them potentially less liquid and more volatile. We recommend that you read the Prospectus and Key Investor Information Document available from the address overleaf or from our website.

Fund manager's commentary

- The portfolio underperformed in December as sector allocation effects (chiefly our significant overweight in consumer staples) weighed on relative returns.
- Faster-than-expected 5G adoption in Asia will open the door for new business opportunities.
- A benign US dollar environment will provide tremendous liquidity support, enabling an easing of fiscal (and to some degree) monetary policy.

The portfolio underperformed in December as sector allocation effects (chiefly our significant overweight in consumer staples) weighed on relative returns. Stock selection effects were broadly neutral in aggregate. Weakness in our discretionary names was largely offset by strength in our industrials and communication services holdings. Prada was the top portfolio performer while Chinese sporting goods company Li Ning lagged.

There are a number of macroeconomic factors to consider as we head into 2020. Geopolitical rivalry could intensify as the US heads into an election year. Hard line political machismo from President Trump could see the trade war morph into a war for capital in an extreme case. Equally, though, we could see a more conciliatory tone from the maverick in the White House.

On the opposing side, China has other concerns. Not only is it facing an economic slowdown but also political challenge from Hong Kong. We must also be cognisant of social unrest stemming from wealth inequality spreading to Asia (as recently seen in Chile, Bolivia and Lebanon) and other countries where income growth has stagnated and job opportunities are scant. If US inflation picks up and the Federal Reserve changes tack again, it could lead to pressure on Asian economies.

Nevertheless, there are positives. Faster-than-expected 5G adoption in Asia will open the door for new business opportunities. A benign US dollar environment will provide tremendous liquidity support, enabling an easing of fiscal (and to some degree) monetary policy in the region, allowing China, India and regional economies to stabilise. This could be a big positive for asset prices in Asia.
