Optimism returned to the markets in May, offsetting the sluggish performance of the previous month. In a context of easing geopolitical tensions combined with a drop in long-term rates in the US supported by growth data, new impetus has been restored on the markets, with the technology sector still in the lead. By region, Switzerland was in the lead for once, followed by a good performance from the US and Europe. Volatility continued to decline both for bonds and equities. Regarding currencies, the US dollar's upward trend since the beginning of the year reversed and it depreciated against the euro and the CHF. Against this backdrop, the portfolio posted a positive performance, slightly underperforming its benchmark index.
