Monthly comment

After a very strong performance in Q3, the Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV - Listed Infrastructure Fund pared some gains in October. Global equity markets experienced volatility during the month, but continued to push higher amidst ongoing optimism regarding monetary policy easing. However, as the US elections drew closer and prospects for a second Trump Presidency strengthened, US yields on sovereign debt also rose, dampening returns for the Fund. Despite these fluctuations, investors are becoming increasingly confident in a soft landing for the economy and are now turning their attention to the Q3 earnings season. Among sectors, energy pipelines were the best performers, with airports and data centers also showing solid results. However, overall returns were negatively impacted by renewables and communications towers. In terms of regions, Chinese equities faced some headwinds, but their limited allocation in the portfolio minimizes any significant impact, while North American equities demonstrated robust performance.

US and Canadian pipeline operators emerged as top performers in October. Despite limited stock-specific news, the overall energy sector advanced, driven by strong natural gas demand, particularly from new data center constructions. Kinder Morgan released Q3 results that met expectations and expressed an optimistic outlook on future natural gas demand. Similarly, Williams Cos received several analyst upgrades, reinforcing the positive sentiment surrounding emerging demand trends.

Conversely, the American tower operator Crown Castle experienced a decline in October following slightly weaker-than-expected Q3 results. The full-year 2024 outlook was revised downward after the cancellation of approximately 7,000 small cell nodes, which is expected to result in a USD 125-150 million asset write-down in the fourth quarter. Although this cancellation will save the company around USD 800 million in capital expenditures, it puts some pressure on revenue growth. Nevertheless, macro tower organic growth remained steady at over 4% in Q3, while small cell growth reached 11%.
