MANAGER COMMENTARY

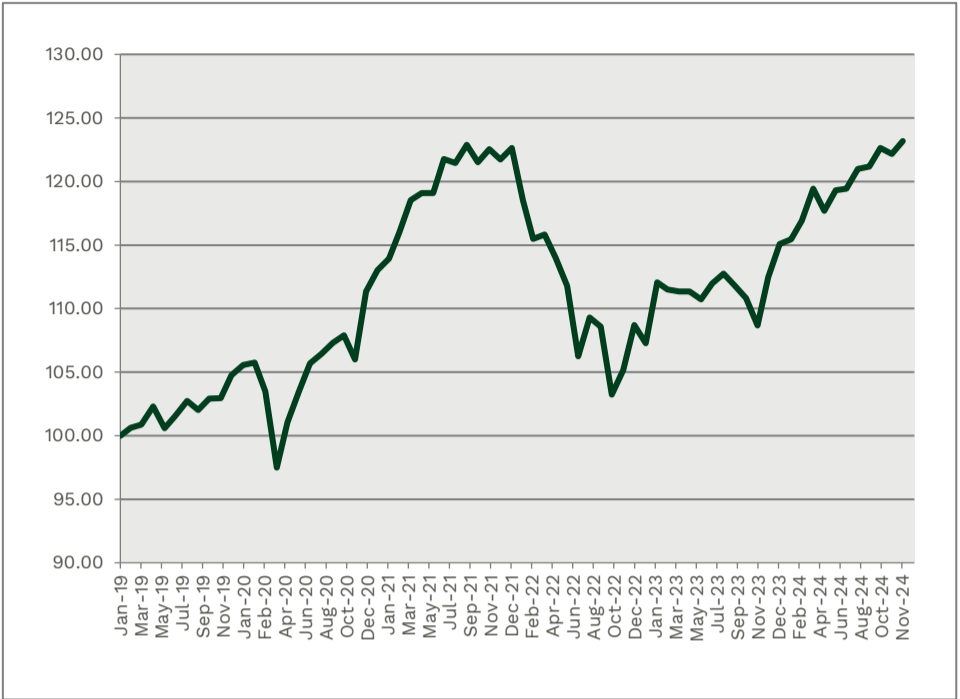

At the beginning of the month, the U.S. presidential elections took center stage. Contrary to concerns that the vote count might be prolonged, the results became clear relatively quickly. Markets had already priced in Trump's reelection, and the so-called "Trump trade" continued to gain momentum in the following weeks. The issue of tariffs came into sharp focus, with potential increases in the cost of imported goods in the U.S. likely to reignite inflationary pressures. Consequently, U.S. interest rates rose, and expectations of further rate cuts were postponed. At the same time, the U.S. dollar appreciated against the Swiss franc. Trump's "America First" policy and the proposed tariffs also set the tone for the equity markets. U.S. stock exchanges responded positively to the election outcome, posting strong monthly gains: the S&P 500 increased by 5.87%, the Nasdaq by 5.3%, and the Dow Jones by an impressive 7.5%. Notably, some sectors, including the long-neglected energy sector (+7.8%) and financials (+10.5%), outperformed technology stocks during the month.

In contrast, European markets saw declining trends, accompanied by falling interest rates. The SPI lost 0.3%, the EuroStoxx50 ended the month down 0.5%, and losses were even more pronounced in Japan (-2.2%) and China (-4.3%). China, in particular, is expected to feel the impact of the tariffs most acutely.

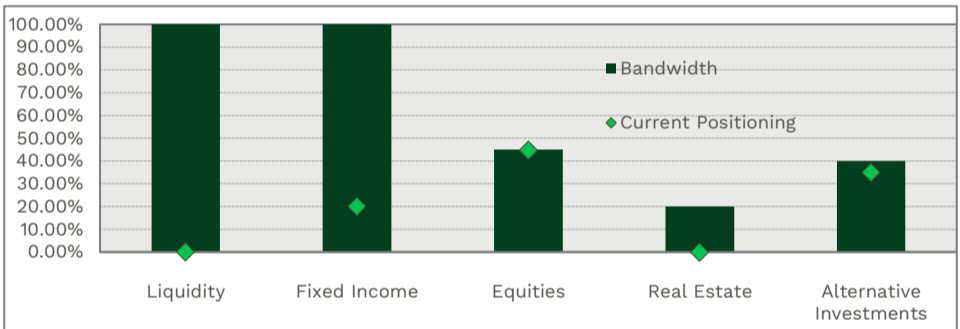

The portfolio fund ended the month with a 0.82% gain. Positive contributions came from U.S. equities, the strong U.S. dollar, as well as fixed-income and alternative investments, while European and Asian equities weighed negatively. Alternative investments again played a stabilizing role in the fund's performance.

On the last trading day of the month, U.S. markets reached new highs, driven by strong Black Friday sales, reflecting robust consumer sentiment in the U.S. Whether the subdued November in Europe will give way to a Christmas rally remains to be seen. What is clear is that upcoming economic data will shape the final trading weeks of the year and significantly influence central banks' monetary policy decisions. While monetary easing appears likely in Europe, it remains uncertain whether the U.S. Federal Reserve will lower interest rates again this year.
