

zMonthly January 25

European stock markets perform strongly in January

Global equity markets had a subdued start to the year as the prospect of fewer interest rate cuts by the US Federal Reserve continued to have an impact. In addition, equity markets reacted with losses to strong labour market data and the subsequent rise in US government bond yields. The publication of slightly better US inflation figures for December marked a turning point in sentiment. European equity markets in particular began to rally. As the month progressed, attention turned to the actions of the new US President, Donald Trump. He made a dynamic start to his second term by issuing a number of executive orders, but initially refrained from introducing new tariffs, which was greeted with relief. The Chinese start-up DeepSeek caused a brief but severe shock in the technology sector. Its newly launched AI model R1 is said to have been trained at significantly lower costs and with less powerful chips compared to similar chatbots. This sent the shares of tech giant Nvidia in particular tumbling. PC accessories maker Logitech had a strong end-of-year quarter and raised its full-year guidance. Richemont, a luxury goods group not held in the Fund, also benefited from strong Christmas sales, which sent its share price soaring. Galenica, the healthcare group, reported better-than-expected sales thanks to market share gains. The fund was up +5.4% in January (SPI +8.2%).

Active on the buy side

In January, we were active only as buyers. The largest transactions were in Nestlé, Novartis, Holcim, Givaudan, Zurich IG, Logitech, SGS, Roche and ABB.

Trump launches a trade war

The markets had hoped that Trump was bluffing, but now he is doing it after all. The imposition of high tariffs on imports from Canada and Mexico and additional tariffs on goods from China will only create losers and could trigger a spiral of escalation. A trade war will lead to higher prices for consumers and lower economic growth. It is probably only a matter of time before tariffs are imposed on imports from Europe and Switzerland. Uncertainty still surrounds the further impact of the political changes in America. For example, it is still completely unclear what specific measures will be taken in terms of tax policy or regulatory measures. Led by a few large caps, the reporting season has already started in January. This will increasingly occupy us in the coming weeks. The start to the new trading year has been very encouraging for Swiss equities as well, exceeding our expectations. However, visibility remains low and Trump's unpredictability could still bring us some surprises.
