Review

July was another strong month for global equities as the soft landing narrative became investors' base case scenario once again. The technology sector also participated in the rally. Small cap and high beta names were the main drivers of returns in July, while mega caps took a breather. Q2 earnings have been in line with or slightly better than expectations so far, but high expectations going into the earnings season have led to sharp sell-offs. Against this backdrop, the fund underperformed the MS peer group in July. Semis and software were the positive contributors, while the underweight in the consumer discretionary and financials sectors eroded the fund's performance.

Outlook

The COVID-19 pandemic will have long-lasting implications and will change the future behaviour of corporates and consumers. The rising need for faster internet bandwidth, innovative cybersecurity solutions and decentralised computing is set to rapidly increase in the coming years. We have therefore tilted towards these long-term winners and taken advantage of certain mispricing in the market. Going forward, we are confident that our differentiated investment approach will help us to navigate through this environment. Although we continue to build the core of the portfolio around the secular growers (i.e. software), we still "embrace cyclical" by investing in industries whose multiples are lower and whose end markets have been contracting for a very long time (i.e. memory, logistics automation, analogue semiconductors).
