Review

July was a strong month for the equity markets, even though the US Federal Reserve was determined to increase the fed funds rate by another 25bps in the face of subsiding inflation. Continued low unemployment is fuelling healthy consumer spending and demand for technology. In this environment, the healthcare sector, along with other defensive sectors such as utilities and consumer staples, are still underperforming the broader market. This has also been underpinned by a generally poor earnings season for healthcare stocks, with consensus expectations being undershot more than in other sectors. Yet it was actually the companies that beat and raised expectations that tended to perform poorly. "Sell on the news" was a rampant practice, while the poorer earnings reporters often saw short-covering rallies. As a result of the aforementioned stock-trading phenomena, the fund underperformed the Morningstar Healthcare category. Dexcom and Boston Scientific were some names with stellar earnings results that witnessed sell-offs.

Outlook

The recent rise in interest rates on the back of Fitch's downgrade of the US sovereign debt rating and the surge in oil prices has triggered a sell-off in growth stocks and undermined our assumption that the rally would broaden to include smid cap healthcare growth names. We are reducing our overweight in smid cap Biotech growth stocks in the fund versus the Morningstar Healthcare peers. We have increased our weighting of value smid caps such as Fresenius AG. We remain neutral in the pharmaceuticals sector. The ongoing discussion on drug pricing reform and the expected political rhetoric against the industry as we head into the US presidential election cycle make it untenable to invest in large caps at present. We are also maintaining our overweight in medtech and healthcare facilities. These companies have reported strong Q2 2023 earnings and positive 2023 outlooks. Our smid cap biotech holdings have largely derisked pipelines.
